On Wednesday 16th November, 2016, Teresa Kearney, Superintendent/Registrar, South West Middlesex Crematorium, presented a cheque for £4,337.00 to The Marie Curie Charity, in the crematorium grounds. The charity was nominated for its continued support to the dying and the bereaved. Emma Dolman thanked the crematorium for the kind donation and confirmed it will be used to “deliver expert hands on care, emotional support, research guidance, helping people living with a terminal illness”. Mrs. Angela Bradley, whose husband James died of cancer, said “the Marie Curie nurses were wonderful and helped my family and myself through a very hard time”. This donation was made in his memory.

The monies donated by The South West Middlesex Crematorium Board are a direct result of the metal recycling scheme run in association with the Institute of Cemetery and Crematorium Management (ICCM), aimed at making donations to healthcare charities throughout the UK. Recycling only takes place with the written consent of each bereaved family as their needs are paramount to all the organisations involved.

Teresa Kearney said “The Crematorium is delighted that the Marie Curie charity has benefitted from the ICCM recycling scheme, as the charity offers invaluable support to families and the terminally ill throughout the country.
